Push Feel

While it is rumored that the Star and SP-Star switches come via way of a JWK production line, the push feel of these lends credence to that idea. The linear stroke is consistent with firm, solid bottoming and topping outs and only a slight bit of scratch that detracts from the score a bit.

Wobble

The wobble on the Star Greys is fantastic, featuring absolutely no top housing wobble as well as potentially noticeable N/S and E/W direction stem wobble when keycaps are used.

Sound

Aside the slight bit of scratch present in sound like in switch feel, these are very deep sounding linears with solid 'thunks' for both bottom out and top out noise. Additionally, a complete lack of any form of ping or high pitched sound from internal collisions really makes this a stand out sounding linear.

Context

Even with a relatively mysterious background, the Star switch lines are very much stacking up to be reasonably priced and increasingly accessible option to compete against the standard powerhouses of the game.

Other

While I am quite impressed with these switches already, the fact that they have already been improved into the newer SP-Star switches shows me that the designers thought long and hard about the design of these switches. I have a feeling that as more people catch onto these, they'll soon pick up some of these quiet, otherwise unassuming linears.
