Notes

Push Feel

Building on the well-known fame of Gateron Yellow's past, these Pro Yellows are a surprisingly refreshing reintroduction of a classic. Coming in a bit smoother than before with newer molds and a slightly more balanced bottoming to topping out feel, they feel like the Gateron Yellows you know and love, but just a bit better in every way.

Wobble

Coming with purportedly 'new' molds with the flipped Gateron nameplate, these demonstrate a great reduction in stem wobble with no top housing wobble in sight either. While it's still potentially noticeable with keycaps on, stem wobble won't be your gripe with these switches.

Sound

Coming as the clear-topped option, these are just ever so slightly on the deeper side of mid-pitched and have a bit louder and more sharp topping out than bottoming out sound. Paired with a slight scratch noise to them, they're not the best sounding switch but one of the better sounding Gateron Yellows I've heard.

Context

It's heart warming to know that large production houses like Gateron are still making marked improvements on time-held classics like the Gateron Yellow. These are just a bit better in every way than the past, and hopefully with respect to price as well.

Other

Coming in at a bit of a higher bottoming out weight and lesser performance than the Speed Silver Pros released at the same time, these are still a great addition to the Yellow family tree and make me curious as to how hard these will catch on in the community at large.
