Push Feel

Not being anything like the Holy Pandas they are marketed as mimicking, the Pumpkin silent tactiles are early stroke, just a hair above medium strength tactiles with a long, slowly unfurling bump that lands pretty gracefully into firm, dampened, and not at all squishy bottom outs on the LICHICX-style stem dampeners. With the topping out being just as firm and these switches being well and consistently lubed from the factory, there's not much to really complain about at anything short of fast or aggressive typing.

Wobble

Present ever so slightly more in the N/S direction than the E/W direction, the Wingtree x LICHICX Pumpkin switches have a fairly average amount of stem wobble that isn't likely to bother most users except those that are picky about such.

Sound

LICHICX's stem dampening mechanism does more than speak for itself on reputation alone and certainly lives up to it here. These switches have virtually no noise at both bottom out and topping out, which is filled in between by smooth, scratchless strokes. The tactile bumps are surprisingly quiet for their relative strength as well, effectively producing no noise except for a slight squishiness between the stem legs and lubed factory leaves at those faster typing speeds.

Context

Priced at $0.40 per switch and available from a wide range of vendors, these are about as available as one could expect of modern switches and that's good given just how much attention seems to be behind them. The excitement isn't even about the design either, leaving sheer silent tactile performance the feature here that the community is (shockingly) taken by here in 2026.

Other

While these will be remembered as among the more stunning of the unique print decorated LED diffuser switches of 2026, I have a feeling that they're soon to be surpassed in their execution.
