Push Feel

Boasting the same triple shot, inner stem dampening mechanism from WEKT as first introduced in the WEKT Lucy R5s, the Nafus are the slightly lighter, softer, and gentler of WEKT's early silent linears. With a listed bottom out of only 37.5 gf, which is one of the light silent tactiles I've ever seen over the years, these have a soft and dampened feeling that matches their sound in a way perfect for light typists. It should be noted, however, that unlike the Lucy R5s these have some greater degree of switch by switch variability at the point of bottom out.

Wobble

Despite all other features of the WEKT Nafus being quite strong, they have an overall middling, average amount of equal magnitude N/S and E/W direction stem wobble.

Sound

Under normal typing speeds, and especially for light typists, these switches are virtually silent and surprisingly consistent across various typing speeds with no scratch, ping, gumminess, or really anything of note at all. Heavier typing on these light switches, though, induces a tiny bit of squishiness at bottom out that is a bit varied from switch to switch on account of factory lubing. However, I'd imagine that this would even out quite well over extended use.

Context

While the WEKT Nafus are incredibly strong performing silent linears for the modern cost conscious consumer at ~$0.40 per switch, they have a lot less marketing and community awareness from WEKT than their LICHICX-inspired Lucy iterations. Given WEKT's less than prevalent nature in the community throughout their short run, its hard to say if these switches will continue to be available long into the future or are more of a short term silent fling of sorts.

Other

The aura of the Lucy R5 switches clearly wasn't just in their color – this new mechanism from WEKT is incredibly good at silencing switches and at an absolutely incredible price point.
