

Wingtree Nezuko (Dry, 55g)

Last Update: 09/20/2026

Wingtree Nezuko
Switch Type: Linear		Wingtree
28	/35	Push Feel
18	/25	Wobble
5	/10	Sound
12	/20	Context
6	/10	Other
69	/100	Total

Notes

Push Feel

Quite literally designed using texturized molds that are aimed at introducing a scratchy feeling stroke rather than avoiding it, the Wingtree Nezuko linears are thinly and consistently scratchy linears that meet that goal. While the other large aspect of their design in their fiberglass reinforced nylon housings falls flat in delivering the singular, coherent feeling that they were aiming for – instead causing collisions that are thin, flimsy, and vary a lot across typing speeds – it's hard to argue that they are not consistently scratchy in the way they were aiming for.

Wobble

Overall, the Nezuko have a normal, fairly average amount of equal magnitude N/S and E/W direction stem wobble that is not likely to bother most users.

Sound

This is a hard section to score as these switches inarguably are scratchy sounding – something that's normally scored poorly though also not the explicit design aim of a switch. Keeping that in mind relative to it's aim, the only sound that really comes across as 'off' in the dry Nezuko switches is their inconsistently thin, higher pitched, and wildly modulating housing collisions – especially at the point of bottom out.

Context

Priced at $0.35 per switch and available by way of Unikeys, these certainly have availability down pat though longevity is still a point of concern. These are only the latest (and in my opinion best) iteration of continued efforts by designers to make a deliberately scratchy switch, something likely which will not have strong appeal to consumers after further iterations.

Other

The premise of intentionally making a 'flawed' switch, or at least one that leans into features that other switches generally tend to avoid by design, is always something that I can appreciate. It makes scoring hard, sure, but these are definitely notable in how cleanly they are scratchy.

————— GOAT —————